Power line progress

Work is nearing completion on Virginia Electric and Power Company's $2 million transmission line between Pamplin and Appomattox.
Vepco District Manager Dave Stables said the project will improve service reliiliy and provide for future increases in demand for electricity.
Construction on the 115,000-volt line and substation at the outskirts of Appomattox started last fall. The company projects a late October completion date.
Approximately 4,600 area residents will be served by the line, including 1,400 customers of Central Virginia Electric Cooperative.
The new transmission line follows a 12.5 mile across-country route and will augment an existing line of lower voltage paralleling U.S. 460 between the two localities.
Stables said the project was coordinated closely with county and town officials and he expressed appreciation for their efforts.
